A Brief History about Molyko and Molyko practicing primary school

Molyko practicing primary school is found in Molyko village community of the south west region of Cameroon. The community has a growing population of over 10,000 inhabitants most of whom are peasant farmers who earn less than 2 dollars a day and live below the poverty line. The school is mostly attended by very poor village children. Those who are commonly called IDPs (internally displaced persons) who flee from war and insecurity affecting other parts of the country. They are of ages 5-12 years. A total of 324 pupils attend Molyko practicing primary school, of which 178 are girls and 146 boys. Many are orphans, girls, and internally displaced children living with local relatives. The establishment of the school 17 years ago improved school attendance among vulnerable children who had no access to school in the area or had to walk long distances to another school.

It is that time of the year again, where many children are faced with challenges of self-questioning. Will I go to school this year? Last year I was not in school because my parents have no money or because I am an orphan. It is a sad reality to watch kids drop out of school before the age of 10. Some run the streets and hawk items without getting to enjoy their basic right to education. This is the situation in Molyko village community where many children especially orphans, internally displaced children and other vulnerable children are not sure to start schooling this academic year because they do not have a school bag and essential school supplies (exercise books,
