Seeds of Learning

Seeds of Learning believes that education is a universal human right. It also believes that education is the best way to achieve social and economic justice while alleviating poverty. SOL encourages community participation in its projects as means of fostering civic engagement, ownership and as a path to sustainability.

SOL has built more than 190 classrooms in rural villages and neighborhoods throughout El Salvador and Nicaragua. Every year, SOL leads over 20 groups from North America who work alongside community members to not only build relationships, but help construct schools.

SOL operates several resource centers in Nicaragua which include small libraries with reference materials and children's books, computers, games, music and dance classes, trainings and workshops, and other special activities for learners of all ages and from all classes. They are often the only such resource in their communities.
